VIRGINIA POLITICS.

RICHMOND, Feb. 2, 1855.

The Solitary Stumping Tour of Henry A. Wise—No Oppenent in the Field—His Attacks on the New York Yankees—The Know Nothings, de., de.

It is impossible to follow the knight-errant of Accommanupon his political pligrimage without falling into the meet dismal monotony. You have heard of men of one idea—Wise is a man of one speech. When you have got his first speech, you have got his second, his third, his feurth, and so on to his fiftieth. He introduces no new topics; he produces no new idea; he strikes out no new ideatration, from first to last he advances no argument, either old or new. I do not wish to do injustice to Mr. Wise. I believe he acapable of something better than true, fer he was never capable of togic in his best days; but in the line of novelty, of passionate declamation, of sharp invective and vigorous abuse. He had once a pow-erful physical organization and was chockfull of fire and passion. When excited, as he always was when he open-day mouth at all, he could nour forth a torsent of ed his mouth at all, he could pour forth a torrent o have, scorehing, burning and consuming everything in its sery path. But age has weakened his physica. power, and laid its paleying touch upon his fancy, invention, imagination, and has even im-paired the fierce and clarion ring of his voice. He deep leap as far, or turn as many somersets as in his palmy prime. Some allowances, it is true, must be made for the fact that he has no opponent to meet him on the hustings. It requires opposition to bring out his powers. He always shines best when sharp friction is applied. But when no one rouses him, no one disputes his assertions, nobody sneers openly at his origi-nal argumentation, there is no one to snake his long menacing fuger at, he is simply beating the air. The Know Nothings are about him and around him, like the invisible atmosphere; but he sees them not, hears them not, and will not feel them until they gather up into a great tornade in the spring and sweep him from the face of the earth. This is a dull business for a man of Wise's temperament, and hence it is no wonder that in default of somebody to fight, he hops upon your reporter, attacks the New York Herald, and endeavors to mount its editor rough shod. The wnig press of the State, it is true, keep up an incessant fire of small arms upon him; they fill their papers with ridicule and invec-tive; and, worse than all, they pepper him well with his own whig speeches. But this only irritates and exasperates bim, without giving him a mark to drive at. He might as well attempt to carry on a campaign against an army of mosquitoes. They are in his eyes, his ears, his nose, before him and behind him. Why don't his adver-saries, in sheer compassion, bring out a man to relieve

I have alluded to his attack upon the reporter of the Naw York Herald. Permit me to say that, except among his own political serving men, I have heard but one epinion of that attack. There is a universal feeling of indiguation and mortification at this unprovoked assault; universal, I mean, among those who are not besotted by party passions and prejudices. It is all ridiculous for his retainers to pretend that the fact of a gentleman being sent here from New York to report Wise's speeches is an interference of New York in Virginia politics. Was there ever anything more asinice? It was a compliment which Wise's speeches did not deserve to send that reporter. I have no doubt that in fact it did flatter his vanity, and that he called attention to it, in the first place, not to older a rudenest to your reporter, but because he desired it to be generally known that of such knoprtaince was Henry A. Wise and his speeches, that the Nkw Youk Ekralin had sent on a reporter way off to Virginia to preclaim his sayings and doings to the world. Finding that your reporter cid not receive this public notice with the complacency which your notice of him afforded, and imaguing that his Petersburg speech hadn't been correctly reported, he wared wrothy, and is his Charlettsville speech made an attack upon the reporter which so one but his own licutenants pretend to justity. Mr. Wise is about the last man on the earth who is able to tell whether he is reported correctly or not. He says himself that his speech was without notes, and it was undoubtedly a rambiling, disconnected harangue, in which neither words nor ideas were premeditated. He don't know himself what he said half as well as an intelligent reporter could inform him. I have no doubt that he was autonished when he saw himself is print, and I suspect that it is not the first speech of his that astonished him when he saw this print. One of his partisan journals states that, whereas your reporter said that Wise declared himself, at Petersburg, an "infidel radical of democracy," he only said an "infinite radical." One word might bave been easily mistaken for the other, and, at any rate, what was the difference, except that he appeared possibly a shade more nonseculcial in the one case t universal, I mean, among those who are not besotted by party passions and prejudices. It is all ridiculous for willing to set aside the most illustrious of Virginians for him. It is a more heinous offence in their opinion to be a Virginia whig than even a "New York Yankee," unheas the aforesaid Yankee happen also to be a whig, when the old bey himself would be a beauty and a saint in comparison. The misfortune of your reporter was not that he is a "New York Yankee," but that he has dared to cress the track of the candidate of the State of descorate convention. I admire the efformery of these people, in talking about "New York Yankees," with that "New York Yankee," but that when you have you have you have you have you have you have you moment in the Governor's bouse, on Governor street, in the city of Richmond, where he lies in state, in a grand mausoleum, preparatory to his being buried, side by side, with the democratic party of Virginia, in the month of May next. I have nothing to say against old Joe; I think none the worse of him for being a New York Yankee. I think a good deal more of the old man's heart than I do of some Virginians that I wot of. "Tis true that in the Jordan Hatcher case, in which Joe exercised the executive elemency towards a negro in a very aggravated instance of murder, and maintained the right of self-defence on the part of a negro, even against, if I recellect aright, the lawful indiction of punishment by his master, old Joe showed a "lestle" too much Yankeesim, but the old man has been punished for that by the open curse of the whige and the suppressed once of the democrats, and has found "Jordan a hard road to travel." His errors are of the head, not the heart—a kindly, aye, and a brave heart has the old man under his jacket; and loce foce and "New York Yankees" when he was a subject I shall have more to any hereafter, but, in the meantime, would take the liberty, as a Virginian, to suggest a fact, which can be established by the census of 1850, that there are more native bors Virginian in living in New York than "New York Yankees" when you have young to the pride and sensibilities of his co

A BINGULAR CHARACTER—HIS BURIAL.—The Anburn Daily Advertiser mentions the death at Weedsport, Cayaga county, on the 26th ult., of one Harmon Weedon, aged 80. He had acquired a handsome compenery, and many years ago made all his arrangements for his burial. He constructed for himself a stone coffin of the Cayaga limestene, well finished, the coversetting over the sides on a rabbited shoulder, and bolted together with six half-inch bolts, running through from top to bottom, and secured with counter sunk nuts. He requested to be buried in that with "his cloak wrapped around him," and no minister was to be allowed to come near him. His coffin weighed one thousend five hundred pounds, and he gave particular directions how to lover him into the grave. All of his directions were explicitly followed, and by his directions the coffin was not only bolted but cemented together so as to be water tight.

MORE RAILEOAD TROUBLES.—We learn from the Chinton (Rich.) Espress that one of the contractors on the Onkhad and Ottawa railroad, named Gray, on Thursday last had some difficulty with some Irishmen in his employ, in the course of which he was obliged to resert to freezums in self-defenge. Three Irishmen were shot, but none dangerously wounded.
